

David Cotterrell: Creators/VICE : Artists Take On Trauma Recovery in Dublin

Creators

Date: 28th December 2015

The exact nature of trauma, both physical and emotional, is twofold. The word describes a profoundly disturbing or distressing event, as well as its emotional and physical after effects. Each victim and survivor experiences trauma and its impacts in a deeply personal manner, which makes the aftermath all the more difficult to articulate. But if there's any discipline that can be used to effectively communicate what people feel following traumatic events, it's art.

Artists Take On Trauma Recovery in Dublin

Science Gallery Dublin's ongoing 'Trauma: Built to Break' exhibition uses art to communicate the aftermaths of trauma.

SHARE

Project Series by Nancy de la Peña as part of Trauma: Built to Break at Science Gallery at Trinity College Dublin. Images courtesy Science Gallery Dublin.

Artists take on trauma recovery in Dublin Credit: © Dublin Science Gallery (2015)